Why doesn’t Convention of States want the People involved in a Convention?

The Convention of States Project or COS do not want the people involved in a convention because there is no guarantee the people will support the political agenda of the Convention of States Project. Involvement by the people means direct election of delegates by the people. COS opposes the people electing delegates to an Article V Convention.

Using clever advertising COS Project has mishlabeled an Article V Convention as a “Convention of States.” The aim is to associate their political agenda as synonymous for an Article V Convention. There is no provision in the Constitution for a “Convention of States.” Convention of States is a political agenda; an Article V Convention is a constitutional process. They are not synonymous.

The political agenda of COS includes a balanced budget amendment, elimination of federal income tax and state control of federal regulations. To prevent any roadblocks to passage of its agenda, COS favors: (1) appointment of convention “commissioners” strictly controlled by a select group of state legislators; (2) a pre-determined convention agenda; (3) felony arrest for any delegate who fails to vote as instructed by the select group of state legislators; (4) absolutely no input whatsoever by the people in the amendment process.

Clearly COS doesn’t believe its political agenda can pass at a convention unless the convention is rigged. The only reason for COS rigging a convention is COS believes its political agenda lacks support by the people necessary to pass the COS amendments. If the people are involved at a “Convention of States” citizens might object in sufficient numbers to prevent passage. Rather than letting the people have a voice at the convention COS believes the people must be excluded from an Article V Convention.

COS says the people have input. They say the people elect the state legislators who then control the convention without need for any further input by the people. The question you have to ask is whether you trust your state legislators with your Constitution. No state legislature which has applied for a “Convention of States” has even held as much as a public opinion poll to gather input from the people on the issues of an Article V Convention.
